To whom it may concern,

I am writing to introduce a group of MIT Sloan School of Management students who will be traveling to Israel between May 23 and May 31, 2015.

This trip is organized and led by Israeli students of MIT Sloan, and is intended to introduce a globally diverse group of fellow students to the country of Israel. The trip's activities include learning about Israel's economy and startup scene, meeting some of Israel's business and political leaders, learning about the state-of-the-art Israel Defense Force, and experiencing Israeli culture and tourism attractions.

MIT Sloan has a long tradition of supporting student trips such as this to many different countries. They provide an opportunity for MIT Sloan students, who are future global leaders, to learn about a country's history, culture and economy, as well as to meet with business and political leaders. In previous years these trips have been successful, and the student participants have developed great knowledge of and appreciation for the countries they have visited.

We are very grateful for any hospitality you may be able to offer this student group. If you have any questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely yours,
